1. A course for Youth Brigade Commandants was held at Bankya during June and lasted for one month. The curriculum was divided into three parts; during the morning written and physical instruction on military discipline and exercises took place and the afternoons were devoted to propaganda and technical training. As the majority of those taking the course were army men or reserve officers, the instruction was more in the nature of a refresher course. Instead of the Bulgarian system of marching, however, the men were instructed in the Soviet method.
